ACCESSPLUS OPENS IRISH OFFICE

Print management and business communication specialist, AccessPlus has announced it's to open its first office in Ireland. The new office will enable the company to support its growing Irish client base and provide it with a strong platform from which to explore further opportunities in the Irish marketplace. Based in Dublin, and headed up by AccessPlus Ireland general manager, Seamus Leathem, the office will be officially opened on 1st September 2007.

Says Colin Passmore, Chairman, Catalogues and Publications Division, AccessPlus: "The Irish market remains an extremely vibrant one and we see considerable potential in it over the medium to long term. Ireland is the European hub for a number of international businesses in the financial and IT sectors and also has a very buoyant domestic economy, both of which could benefit from the print management and business communication services AccessPlus has to offer.

"Our Irish office general manager, Seamus Leathem, brings with him to the role a wealth of specialist experience in the Irish printing industry, most latterly as commercial manager with an Irish printing and fulfilment company."

Says Jason Cromack, CEO, AccessPlus: "The opening of our Irish office is an exciting step for AccessPlus and is enabling us to once again extend our remit further into Europe. We have an active policy of continuing to identify countries that we believe present great opportunities for our print management and business communication services, and Ireland has long been seen as key territory in this strategy. The opening of our office in Dublin will enable AccessPlus to serve its Ireland-based clients even more effectively. I would like to take this opportunity to offer a warm welcome to Seamus on behalf of the whole AccessPlus team. We are all looking forward to working with him and growing our presence in the Irish marketplace."
