ACCESSPLUS WINS PRINT MANAGEMENT CONTRACT WITH GLOBAL HR GIANT CERIDIAN

Leading print management and business communications provider, AccessPlus, has just secured a significant two-year contract with global human resources service provider, Ceridian. The deal, which was signed and implemented in September, is already helping to reduce Ceridian's supplier costs and production wastage, streamline its internal operations and improve overall efficiencies. The AccessPlus end-to-end solution for Ceridian includes print and document management, data solutions, logistics and campaign delivery services.

AccessPlus was chosen by Ceridian because of its ability to consolidate all of the company's human resources print requirements including payroll, performance management, flexible benefits and employee assistance programmes using its distribution capabilities and software technology. Ceridian serves over 9,600 customers in the UK and pays over seven percent of the UK's working population by processing in excess of 24 million payslips a year. Therefore, AccessPlus' ability to work with existing suppliers, obtain better pricing models, offer greater business continuity and demonstrate immediate cost savings also helped AccessPlus secure the contract.

Nigel Polglass, chief operating officer, Ceridian comments: "At Ceridian, we produce complex business critical documents, therefore, it's crucial we deliver a first class service to our customers. We had some print management tools in place, however, it was clear we needed to appoint an organisation that could offer us the key components and expertise required to manage our level of document production. Our criteria was to find a specialist that could help reduce our print management time, costs and logistics, as well as offer us a professional service."

Mr Polglass continues: "When undertaking our research, we received some very positive testimonials about AccessPlus, which led us to exclusive dealings with the company. We have been very impressed with its follow-through approach, proactive nature, management reporting tools, bidding excellence and overall service. We're already benefiting from AccessPlus' skills and market-knowledge and are now witnessing real financial advantages in terms of enhanced supplier negotiations and delivery. In fact, AccessPlus could easily drive our print management and business communications with little or no intervention from ourselves. We view our work with AccessPlus as a partnership and we're extremely impressed with how things are going. I am confident that we'll continue to benefit from a successful business relationship and to further cost savings and operational and delivery process improvements."

Jason Cromack, chief executive, AccessPlus concludes: "The Ceridian contract follows a number of large contract wins for us this year. The work we are doing with Ceridian is key in helping to streamline its printing operations and manage the wealth of business critical documentation it produces. This contract continues to demonstrate our unique range of print management and business communications capabilities, as well as make a real impact in terms of how Ceridian conducts its print business moving forward."
